

Tracxn

I designed the experience around three stages of the VC workflow: first, discover promising stealth founders; second, evaluate the evidence behind an individual founder; and third, track those founders over time and act when new signals emerge.

1. Stealth Founders Dashboard

This slide shows:

The main discovery database where VCs can identify potential stealth founders using multi-source signals. It allows them to filter by sector, signal strength, seniority, employment status, geography, and hiring activity.

What a VC can find here:

A VC wants to quickly find high-potential founders before they become publicly visible, while having enough signal strength and evidence to decide who deserves further research.

High = 3+ corroborating signals Medium = 2 signals Low = 1 unverified signal

2. Founder Profile

This slide shows:

A detailed profile of an individual stealth founder, combining their background, sector hypothesis, confidence score, evidence behind the signal, and a chronological signal timeline.

What a VC is looking for:

The VC wants to answer, “Why should I believe this person is building something?” and assess the quality of evidence before deciding whether to contact or track the founder.

The screenshot displays the Tracxn platform's 'Stealth Founders' section. The profile for Ananya Rao is highlighted, showing a 'High Confidence' status. The interface includes a sidebar with navigation options like Dashboard, Stealth Founders, My Watchlist, Lists, Alerts, and Reports. The main content area provides a detailed overview of the founder's background, including their last known role (Sr. PM at Razorpay), years of experience (7+ yrs), and sector guess (Fintech → Lending). A 'Signal Timeline' section tracks key events from June to August 2026, such as employment status changes and hiring activity. A 'Confidence Score' of 87/100 is displayed, along with a 'Quick Info' section detailing education (IIM Bangalore) and location (Bengaluru, India). The 'Possible Sector & Theme' section suggests Fintech as the primary guess, with a rationale based on strong signals around lending and payments.

3. My Watchlist + Insights

What this slide shows:

A personalized workspace where VCs can monitor founders they've saved, see new signals, track changes over time, and view aggregate insights across their watchlist.

What a VC is looking for:

The VC wants to prioritize and monitor the most promising founders, receive fresh signals, and know when something meaningful changes so they can act before competitors.
